The Villainous Storm

The model in this photograph was going through an unthinkable time in her life that was full of tragedy, loss, and heartbreak. She called me to ask if we could do a photo shoot, and while thinking about what I wanted the shoot to be, I saw her standing tall in a storm, right in the center of it, but unaffected by the winds, rain, and darkness. Standing tall (even though her head may drop with sadness) during the most difficult of times is something we all go through. This photo was taken at Edgewater Park in Cleveland, under an early winter sky.

The Cataclystic Squirm

This piece was created for the sole purpose of making people experience discomfort from a range of difficult emotions from a brutal image. Its inspiration was drawn from the validation that some people seek through social media and the negative self esteem which is born from seeking this kind of validation. The image was also used to bring awareness to depression, suicide, and the tragic truth of senseless loss that many people have to face on a daily basis.
